Thank you Amy! I will pass this along to SFMTA and make sure the right teams receive it.

The park structure is aligned with most all of the larger master developments in the City (a tangent to your question but as FYI). We have worked closely with RPD through the Design Standards and Guidelines development. RPD is very focused on development of their new park at 900 Innes and revitalizing other key existing parks (there will be a parks bond on the ballot this November to assist that effort) so that the whole system can continue to thrive.

Leigh --

Happy belated Mother's Day!

I sure would prefer the park in the project become part of the stable of parks belonging to SF Rec and Parks. I heard from Kearstin in 2018 that this was possible, during the chilly open air community event about the park.

Is this just some misplaced, antiquated, and romantic attachment to a venerable public institution that I love and believe in?
